colonial days

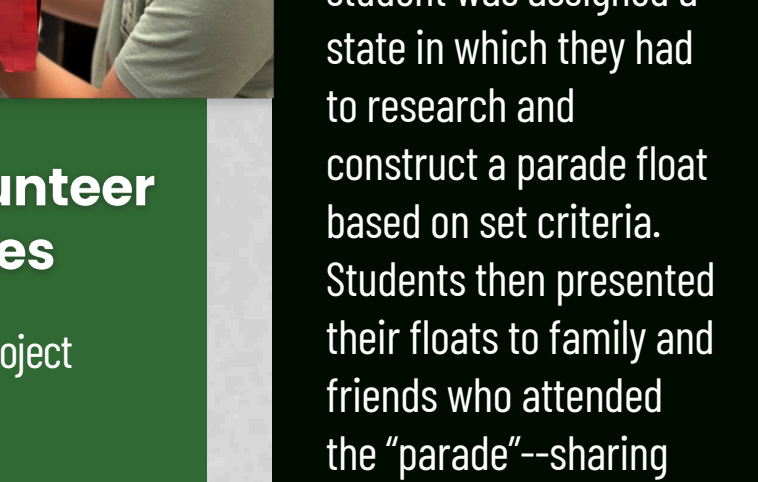

For a child of the twenty-first century, imagining what Colonial life might have looked like can be challenging. These past weeks kindergarten through second grade have been busy learning about the Pilgrims, the Mayflower journey, and the Wampanoag Native People. On Friday, November 22, primary students were submersed into a hands-on learning experience discovering what common Colonial period tasks might have looked like. From making corn husk dolls and candles to churning butter--these were just some of the unique opportunities for students. It was a fun and fast paced morning, and as always events like this are not possible without your help! Thank you to all of our volunteers.

state projects

It's more than just an assignment. It's a multifaceted project that promotes creativity, research and public speaking skills. Last week, fifth grade made great work of their state float projects. Each student was assigned a state in which they had to research and construct a parade float based on set criteria. Students then presented their floats to family and friends who attended the "parade"--sharing fun facts and the history of their state.

There are lots of great shopping deals coming up this Thanksgiving Break. Will we have a winner declared, when we come back from break? Stay tuned! Final competition results will be tallied based on actual items received and class participation.

You can find your child's class basket theme HERE. Baskets will be up for bidding during the March 1st auction with proceeds going right back into enriching students' lives on campus. We are grateful for your participation.

Oh give thanks to the Lord, for he is good; for his steadfast love endures forever!
